Education.

Among the first acts that will devolve upon the local government when the Legislature shall next meet, will be the introduction of a Bill to provide for the education of the youth of our country. The heartless indifference which has hitherto characterized the Executive and Legislative authorities of British Columbia upon this subject, is scarcely to be paralleled in any country. It is true our statute book contains several laws relating to education, each succeeding one professing to be an amendment of that which immediately preceded it, but which in reality only tended to curtail the sphere of their usefulness, until at last the system fell to pieces from its own inherent weaknesses. The result proved one of two things—either the authors of those various measures were not so well posted on the subject of education as they supposed they were and ought to have been before they took them in hand, or they designedly so framed them as to make them practically useless, while pretending to acquiesce in the generally expressed desire of the people for a good practical system of education such as would enable the very poorest in our midst to avail themselves of its advantages as a medium for the acquisition of the rudiments of an English education for their children, without having their names inscribed on the school register as so many paupers. Public opinion, which, on this subject at least, was entitled to respectful consideration on the part of the Government, has always been in favor of an absolutely free system of education, maintained either directly from the public treasury, or by means of a revenue derived from the sale of public lands set apart for that purpose. The advocates of free schools have always contended that the youth of the State have quite as strong, if not stronger, claims upon the Government for educational support, as have the helpless poor, the disabled, or the criminal classes; because, while education, generally diffused among the mass of the people, imparts strength, dignity, and wealth to a country, the want of it operates in precisely the opposite direction, and is the prolific parent of by far the greater portion of all the poverty, wretchedness and crime which prevails in this and other countries, as criminal statistics abundantly demonstrate. Yet it seems strange that intelligent men are found amongst us who quietly and uncomplainingly bear any amount of taxation for the maintenance of reformatories, prisons, and chain-gangs, who, the moment the subject of appropriating public monies for educational purposes is broached, manifest the most bitter hostility thereto, and in terms more forcible than polite denunciations those who dare even hint at such a measure as little better than plunderers. We confess we could never understand the consistency of these people, or see any force in their objections to the adoption of a thoroughly national system of education, free alike to every man's child from the highest to the lowest in the land. We have neither time nor space to examine the various objections urged by the advocates of limited knowledge to a free school system,—nor do we deem it necessary, as they have time and again been discussed and their fallacy pointed out—but their leading objection, the one upon which all others seem to hinge, is, that the duty of educating the child belongs alone to the parent and not to the State, and that to apply the public revenues to such a purpose is on the one hand to encourage parental negligence in the matter of education by relieving parents of a natural duty, and on the other to divert the money so spent from the legitimate objects for which it was collected. The answer to this is, that if ignorance is the parent of crime, (and all admit that it is,) then money invested in public schools, where the youth of the land receive proper moral and intellectual instruction, is much more economically laid out than it would be in the erection of prisons and the maintenance of paupers. Hereafter it has been the boast of the anti-free school party that an absolutely free system of education did not exist in any country. Practically, the Prussian system is a free system. The State not only provides the school and the teacher, but makes it compulsory upon the parent to send his child to school, that it may acquire at least the rudiments of a common education. In several of the States of the American Union, education is as free as the air the people breathe, the Government having made ample provision therefor by setting apart a portion of the public domain as a State endowment for educational purposes. Ontario, the most wealthy and progressive Province in the Dominion of Canada, at the last session of its Legislature passed an Act making education absolutely free to all who choose to avail themselves of it, and in addition thereto, making it compulsory upon every parent, under certain penalties, to see that all his children—of legal school age—attend regularly the national or some other school. To our mind, this is just as it should be. Where the State provides the public school and makes education free, the question of attendance of children should not be left optional with the parents, lest through carelessness or some other culpable cause, the good intentions of the Government be frustrated, and the youth of the country be deprived of their inherent right to that degree of mental culture necessary to fit them for the everyday duties of life. In our sister Province of Ontario we have a noble precedent for the adoption of a free school system for British Columbia. The public sentiment of the Colony is largely in favor of it. The future revenue of the country will doubtless be amply suf-

Scient to sustain it; but if not, it will not require any great amount of financial ingenuity to provide the ways and means to make good any deficiency that may accrue, so as to render the school fund adequate to every demand that may be made upon it. The secret of Prussia's success in the late war with France is said to be attributable as much to the superior mental culture of the rank and file of the Prussian army as to their superior discipline—a fact which has forced itself upon more than one European power since the war closed, and which promises to bear good fruit in the emancipation of the masses of the common people of Europe from that condition of mental thralldom in which their rulers have for ages kept them. The war referred to has taught them that knowledge means power, and that, all other things being equal, an uneducated people stand but a poor chance when opposed to an enemy who, in addition to careful discipline in the use of arms, carries to the field a well trained mind. The Canadian Dominion, we are informed, is about to adopt the Prussian system of military tactics, and Ontario has already copied her educational system; then why should not British Columbia also adopt the free school system of Prussia, and thus prove within her own borders, and thus prove herself in every way worthy to take her place in the British American Dominion? We certainly hope soon to see our fondest dreams in this respect realized, that which we know of nothing better calculated to induce people to visit our country and make it their permanent home.
